Dear Mr. Wakefield,

Our new place here is very small for the work we are doing and our drawing office is crowded to overflow. This sounds very grand, but as it is only a bit of our Office you need not imagine anything vast. We are, however, doing some very interesting work as we have a new machine to build for a Naval Officer who is now flying at the Front, and the Admiralty are very likely to take it over.

Mr. Blondeau says that he will make room for Captain Campbell in another part of the Office, if he wishes to come. As to terms, we hardly know what to say, as we don't really need another draftsman, and we have a very exceptional man coming over from France for whom we have been waiting for a long time. We should not like to refuse a friend of yours if we could be of any help to him. Don't you think your friend could suggest the terms he thinks fair, as we do not know his powers, nor quite what his wishes are in the matter. We will, however, do our best to meet him when we know a little more of his ideas on the subject.

I have so often thought of you, and I was going to write and ask what you were doing, but we are and have been so busy that there is never time for anything but work.

Yours sincerely,

Hilda B. Hewlett
